Dear Cristina:

Many thanks for your kind invitation to join with you in celebrating the 25th anniversary of Dialogue on Diversity. Arcy and I regret that we are unable to attend this wonderful event. However, by way of this letter we want to pay tribute to you and your colleagues who over the years have built an entity of shared commitment toward greater diversity among Latina women and other ethnic backgrounds to engage in entrepreneurial activities.

Today we are cognizant of the enormous and outstanding role of women in socio-economic and political leadership. To be sure, so many of them were participants of the Dialogue on Diversity experience.

We are proud and honored to have been early supporters of your courageous endeavor and want to wish you and the elebrants another 25 years of continued success.

Sincerely,

Arcy and Esteban E. Torres

German Artists and the Great War

Many German artists showed the first fury of hostility. I sat with my fellow countrymen, the worst of them, the flag-waving gave way to a bitter recognition of the real industrial war and the inescapably high loss of life. In Germany, front-line soldiers were killed on the front lines. Others survived, but were forever changed by their vigil. Of the artists whose work was on display, Ernst Ludwig was a volunteer for service. Still, through a series of battles, the German army was losing the war.

Volunteers were sent back to work on creating allies, one of a series. They had never been soldiers before. Their attempt to join the war was doomed and was doomed to failure. Later years, musicians, writers, and artists gathered to reflect and commemorate the war.
